

Building Blocks

Thick as a brick. That's a good description of the person who constructed this hard-won excuse for a scaffold. Only someone missing ninety percent of their brain cells would step onto something like this.

Y'know, in spite of what the third little pig says, stuff made out of bricks won't stand up to everything. Those brick "columns" certainly can't be sturdy, and I suspect that if the big bad wolf walked by and just nudged the platform, it would cause this masterpiece to fall like a house of straw.

Folks, there will always be times when you need to improvise to get a job done, by using the resources you have available. If you must do so, first step back, take a good, hard look at your handiwork, and ask yourself if what you're about to do will get you hurt.